What is Open Studios?

Open studios events occur regularly in and around Greater Boston in areas such as the South End, Somerville, Fort Point Channel, North Cambridge, Waltham, Newton, Brookline, and South Boston (to name just a handful). Open studios events have proven to be a successful venue for artists to introduce their work to the public outside of a more formal exhibition space such as a gallery.

With the scarcity of exhibition opportunities for artists, Open Studios present opportunities to share work with the public and to meet other artists in the area. Unlike a more formal gallery or museum setting, open studios are designed to be a free, self-directed progressive art tour where people start with a map of the region and go from studio to studio, interacting with the artists and gaining exposure to a rich diversity of artistic styles and media.

A map will list the site, the artists, and their media. Artists are highly encouraged to send the event brochure to their own mailing list, and maps will also be available at locations in town.

Arlington Open Studios, AOS, will provide a chance for the public to gain an insider's view of working artists — their tools and their techniques, media and methods, ideas and inspirations. AOS will raise awareness about the quality and quantity of Arlington artists. For some artists, it is also a chance to educate the public about the particular media they use, such as printmaking, stained glass, or fiber arts.

If you haven't been to an open studios event before, there are a few coming up, and we encourage you to attend to for ideas and inspiration. Local open studios include:

- In the Spring:
- Somerville: Somerville Open Studios and Vernon Street Open Studios.
See www.somervilleartscouncil.org
 - Newton Open Studios
 - North Cambridge Open Studios
- In the Fall:
- Jamaica Plain Open Studios
 - Fort Point Open Studios
 - South End Open Studios

and many others!
